Health Seminar Planned

School administrators will explain a five-district cooperative educational project to PTA leaders at a meeting to be held in Los Angeles Friday.

Project Quest will be explained to parents from Torrance, Inglewood, Downey, Duarte, and El Rancho at 10 a.m. in the Title III offices.

Earlier this week teachers participating in the project from Torrance and Inglewood heard a talk by Dr. James McNeil, professor of education at UCLA. Dr. McNeil discussed behavioral objectives during a talk delivered Tuesday at Magruder Elementary School.

PROJECT Quest, currently in the second year of a three-year study, is a federally financed study to develop a health curriculum for students in kindergarten through 12th grade that meets present day needs of youth.

Purpose of the project is to come up with a health instruction guide that is both sequential and innovative. The program will directly benefit more than 85,000 students.

Materials which were developed last year will be tried out in classrooms of selected schools after teachers have been trained to use them. Each district will evaluate their effectiveness. Teacher training and evaluation and use of new materials will continue next year.

AMONG THE health problems being tackled in the new curriculum are: accidental death, venereal disease, drug use, use of alcoholic beverages, and promiscuity and illegitimate birth.

"The potentiality add challenge of Project Quest," states Dr. Donald Duncan, curriculum consultant for Torrance Unified School District, "is to help every person become a health-educated individual, one who uses health as a directing force in his everyday life, one who assumes a responsible health role in society, and one who can cope effectively with critical health problems."
